

LONDON HAS NO USE FOR GERMAN

Those Having Shops and Restaurants in British Capital Faring Badly.

London, Eng., Sept. 2.—There are in London many thousands of Germans, in various lines of business, whom the international war has affected in a variety of ways. Though the people of London are not as actively partisan as the citizens of Paris and Berlin, they have nevertheless, showed the Germans in their midst that they are not welcome and that Londoners in time of war want nothing Teutonic.

That German residents and commercial houses in all parts of London are feeling a not unreasonable anxiety these days, is evident in many ways. One sees it in the west end, where the offices of the German steamship companies are shuttered. Bakers and other tradesmen in that section, who have by years of dealing, grown familiar to customers under honest German names, have lost much of their trade and are trying to regain it under such English names as "Stewart & Company" and "Harris" and the like.

German Stores Disappear.
On drug stores entering to German trade the signs "Deutsche Apotheke" have mysteriously disappeared. Other German tradespeople are adopting strenuous measures to hold their trade and ingratiate their British customers. In one west end delicatessen shop appears a sign "The proprietor is a naturalized British subject, and further insurance of the safety of all my shops will be given to the British Red Cross society."

The average Londoner, who would not dream of throwing a stone through a druggist's window or helping to wreck a caterer's store, may smile at these things. But in many parts of the city German residents have little cause to smile. In two cases German bakers' shops have been wrecked in the night, and in one case a German grocer suffered similarly.

Palace Leads to Violence.
In the foreign quarters, where Germans live and do business in German numbers, stories have been spread that German bakers, druggists and caterers have planned to poison their food and medicines in order to kill their English customers. Such stories are utterly groundless, of course, but in the heated time of war, they inflame the British people of the neighborhood and lead to violence, lawlessness and outrage.

At present the Germans themselves are appearing outwardly serene, but not a few of them are quietly disposing of their business and property in preparation for leaving the country, some of them returning to the Fatherland, but the most of them going to the United States.

BOURSE IN BERLIN MAY REOPEN SOON

Berlin, Germany, Sept. 2.—The German government will meet today to discuss the question of reopening the Berlin stock exchange for regular business. The brokers at the Berlin exchange were optimistic. There was some private demand and a number of securities showed higher quotations.

HOW LONG WILL THIS WAR LAST?

There are no Definite Answers, of Course, but Precedents are Cited.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 2.—How long will the present European war last?

It's a fool question, of course, because there is no certain answer. But when there is an unanswerable question it is the custom to look up precedents. Here are a few precedents:

The two most recent "Central European" wars were settled in an amazingly short time. In 1866 Prussia and Austria went at each other's throats over the July Schleswig-Holstein; home to which neither of them, by the way, had any right. That war lasted only seven weeks, and it ended in Prussia giving Austria a terrible and humiliating beating.

France and Sardinia also gave Austria a crushing defeat in 1859—in a war in which the general fighting lasted less than a month. This list does not include Italy's earlier and feebler struggles for liberty against Austria, as in 1848-49, etc.

In July, 1870, France and Prussia went to war. The general fighting in that war lasted barely a month. Of course, the siege of Paris and other maneuvers dragged on much longer. But the actual clash in the field began early in August and ended early in September.

The Russo-Turkish war, six years afterward, was longer by a year or more, but the Russo-Greek war in the 1820s was a matter of one swift campaign. The Russo-Japanese war was also comparatively brief.

In American history—here is roughly—the duration of the important wars:

Revolutionary war, eight years. War of 1812, two years and eight months. Mexican war, two years and 11 weeks. Civil war, four years. Spanish war, seven and a half months (with the bulk of the fighting done in two and a half months).

All but one of the foregoing wars were done between two nations. The last general European war was the Crimean, when England, France, Turkey and Sardinia combined against Russia, from 1854 to 1856. That war continued for about two years and resulted in a sound thrashing for Russia.

Before that the Napoleonic wars intermittently brought every nation in Europe to the battlefield. These wars continued, with breaks of long or short duration, for more than 20 years.

At present the Germans themselves are appearing outwardly serene, but not a few of them are quietly disposing of their business and property in preparation for leaving the country, some of them returning to the Fatherland, but the most of them going to the United States.

RUSSIANS HAVE RELIGIOUS FAITH

Peasants Have Implicit Confidence in God; Country Not a Mad Jumble.

By SIDNEY DARR.

Paris, France, Sept. 2.—The Russian people believe in God. This is the first fact that strikes every competent observer. Stephen Graham is impressed by this belief all the time. Maurice Barling never forgets it. H. G. Wells discovered it with some astonishment. Let us quote Mr. Barling. In his book, "What I Saw in Russia," he says:

"If you talk to a peasant for two minutes you will notice that he has a fervent belief in a great, good and inscrutable Providence. His manner accords with the calmities to which flesh is heir. When the railway strike was at its height, and we were held up at a small station, the train attendant repeated all day long that God had sent us a severe trial, which he had."

"Yesterday I had talk with a man who had returned from the war; he had been a soldier and surgeon's assistant, and had received the Cross of St. George for rescuing a wounded officer under fire. I asked him if he had been wounded. He said, 'No, my clothes were not even touched. Men all around me were wounded. This was the ordinance of God. God had pity on the Russian boys. It was all over before that was to come home. So it was to be.'"

I also had talk with a stenographer yesterday, who said to me, 'I and my whole family have prayed for you in your absence, because these are times of trouble, and we did not know what bitter cup you might not have to drink.' Then he gave me three new laid eggs with which to eat his very good health."

Peasants' Faith in Street Carriers.
It is important to remember the faith of the great mass of the Russian people, because it implies most of their other essential characteristics, and because it is the real explanation of anti-Russian feeling. Merely to believe in God nowadays is to be almost offensively eccentric. In Russia on Palm Sunday the policeman prays at the corner of the street.

Peasant Greatest Russian Factor.
Russia is the land of peasants. The growing industrial life of the cities is naturally colored and affected by German and French interests, but the peasant still remains the greatest factor in Russian life, and the peasant is still uninfluenced by eastern ideas.

He is musical, intensely charitable, as distrustful as nearly all countrymen are, and highly imaginative. He is the descriptions of the Russian peasant by Mr. Barling and Mr. Graham inevitably remind one of the peasant one meets in Ireland.

H. G. Wells says: "In Russia things are taken seriously. The Russian's soul, just as much as his church and his pictures and his children's toys, is done in stronger, simpler, more emphatic colors. His religion is real, his monarchy is real, his life is a passionate self-examination, because he has faith."

The Russians and the Irish are the most religious people left in the world.

Not a Mad Jumble of Cosmetics.
Popular English fiction and drama have filled our minds with a series of melodramatic pictures concerning Russia and the Russians, but the land of the czar is not really a mad jumble of cosmetics and knavish and pogramme and gentle nihilists and naughty grand dukes. It is a land of men and women who have not forgotten their dream. In the last century it produced literature in Europe. The music is new and wonderful. It is revolutionizing theatrical art.

Modern Germany is the very epitome of materialism, while Russia stands for the spirit, and it is well for Great Britain that she is on Russia's side, on the side of the nation that produced Tolstoy, and still holds to the faith once committed to the saints.

BARON HELD AS KID.
London, Eng., Sept. 2.—Baron Lewis Von Helldorf of Coburg, Germany, was arrested in London today on the charge of espionage and placed in one of the concentration camps as a prisoner of war.

TUNKS GERMAN COULD WHIP U. S.

Member of Prussian General Staff Has Queer Information About U. S. Army.

New York, Sept. 2.—Germany invading the United States, seizing the principal cities, holding the great railways until the country was starved out—this seems a flight of wild imagination to Americans. Such is just the plan outlined by Gen. Von Edelsheim in a recent book. He is no hare-brained Pan-German either, but a member of the Prussian general staff. Here in his memorandum:

Commercial Friction Frequent.
"Operations against the United States of North America would have to be conducted in a different manner from those against England. During last year political friction with that state, especially arising from commercial causes, has not been lacking, and the difficulties that have arisen have mostly been settled by our giving way. As this obliging attitude has its limits, we have to ask ourselves what forces we can possibly bring to bear in order to meet the attacks of the United States against our interests and to impose our will. Our fleet will probably be able to defeat the naval forces of the United States, which are distributed over two oceans, over a long distance. But it would be a mistake to suppose that the defeat of their fleet will force the United States with its immense resources into concluding peace."

Would Be Difficult Undertaking.
"In view of the small number of American colonies, which are not even pacified, in view of the excellent fortifications with which the great American seaports are provided, and which cannot be taken except with very heavy losses, and in view of the large number of American warships, all of which we cannot blockade at the same time, our fleet has no means to force that opponent through successful maritime operations into concluding a peace on our terms."

"The possibility must be taken into account that the fleet of the United States will at first not venture into battle, but that it will withdraw into fortified harbors, in order to wait for a favorable opportunity of achieving victory success. Therefore it is clear that naval action alone will not be decisive against the United States, but that the combined action of navy and army will be required. Considering the great extent of the United States, the conquest of the country by an army of invasion is not a simple matter. There is every reason to believe that victorious enterprises on the Atlantic coast and the conquest of the most important harbors will be followed by a series of operations which will create such an unbearable state of affairs in the whole country that the government will readily offer acceptable conditions in order to obtain peace."

"If Germany begins preparing a fleet of transports and troops for landing purposes at the moment when the battle fleet steams out of our harbors we may conclude that operations on American soil can begin after about four weeks, and it cannot be doubted that the United States will not be able to oppose to us within that time an army equivalent to our own."

Underestimates American Force.
"At present the regular army of the United States amounts to 135,000 men, of whom about 35,000 could be disposed of. Of these at least 10,000 are required for watching the Indian territories and guarding the frontiers. Therefore only about 25,000 men of the regular army are ready for war. But the United States militia are in existence, of whom the larger part did not come up when they were called out during the last war. The militia is not a new creation, it is partly armed with muzzle loaders and its training is worse than its armament."

"As an operation by surprise against America is impossible, on account of the length of time during which the transports are on the way, only a landing can be effected by surprise. Nevertheless, stress must be laid on the fact that the rapidity of the invasion will completely facilitate victory against the United States, owing to the absence of methodical preparation."

PROWESS OF U. S. IS UNDERESTIMATED.
Washington, D. C., Sept. 2.—The Prussian general staff greatly underestimates the military prowess of the United States, judging from the remarks of Gen. Von Edelsheim in his memorandum on the feasibility of an invasion of America. This was the opinion of naval and military experts interviewed here today.

They were slightly amused at some of Von Edelsheim's ideas.

It was even suggested that some of these errors were as gross as to lead to the doubt that any member of the Prussian general staff could have been guilty of them.

According to the printed accounts, Gen. Von Edelsheim declared: "At present the regular army of the United States amounts to 135,000 men, of whom about 35,000 could be disposed of. As a matter of fact, there are 25,000 men of the American army of whom, outside of contingents in the Philippines, Hawaii, China, Porto Rico, the canal zone and coast defense, about 10,000 men, according to an estimate made today, could be put into the field. The size of the American army can be found in any annual report of the secretary of war."

Army officers were especially inclined to laugh over the Prussian general's idea that of our forces, "at least 10,000 are required for watching the Indian territories." Few Americans, they said, had to be told how ridiculous this is; in fact, the Indian tribes would undoubtedly supply some of the bravest fighters in a United States volunteer force.

"Lastly," Van Edelsheim is credited with asserting, "the militia is not efficient; it is partly armed with muzzle loaders, and its training is worse than its armament." The American national guardsmen are not armed with "muzzle loaders." They are armed with Springfield rifles of the regular army type, and there are no more than enough Springfields of the type used

Waving of Standard Brought Prince Degth

Copenhagen, via London, Sept. 2.—The following account by the Danish press of the death of prince Frederick William of Lippe at Liège:

"On all sides our detachment was surrounded by Belgian troops who were exterminating us. At the prince's command we made a direct deep, maintaining a stubborn defence. At length a strong division arrived to support us. The prince raised himself from a kneeling position and turned to the standard bearer, who lay beside him covering the standard with his body."

"Raise the standard!" commanded the prince, "so we may be recognized by our friends."

"The standard bearer raised the flag, waving it to and fro. This action immediately brought on the standard bearer and the prince a violent fusillade. The standard was shot away and struck in the chest and expired instantly."
